The hiccup of Iconoclasm can be characterized as an elevated poetic of landscape painting, without the Person. (It would be worth the effort for a doctoral dissertation to consider the effects of the poetics of iconoclastic painting on the removal of the Person, and the effect of this abstract iconoclastic art on western abstract art).

The Greek word mimesis defies exact translation, though "imitation" works quite well in the context of the Poetics. A chair is something you can sit in, but a painting of a chair is merely an imitation, or representation, of a real chair. Paintings use paint to imitate real life, and sculptures use stone.
